Our Project-Based Programme

FDU's Master of Public Administration (MPA) is a 42-credit US degree, recognized internationally. It comprises 13 modules of 3 credits each, including:

- 6 core required management courses;
- 6 elective courses;
- a dissertation or project report;

and

- an internship or independent study, unless waived based upon public and non-profit experience.

The Wroxton College experience allows candidates to undertake individual modules for which short course certificates will be awarded, or to build up 42 credits for an MPA. The focus of teaching and assignments is on problem-solving and project-based learning and portfolios, with tasks such as policy recommendations, White Papers, and presentations.

Two modules can be undertaken per term over three weekends. Each weekend, one module runs on Saturdays, and the other on Sundays. Therefore, you have the option of attending for one day for three weekends, or both days. Accommodation at the College will be available to book at a reasonable rate for a limited number of participants. Lunch, dinner and refreshments are included for all students.

You can also accelerate your degree by taking online-only electives.

With the uncertainty relating to COVID-19, the programme will begin with online-only modules in January 2020, which will include lectures and collaborative problem-solving exercises in groups including students from the UK, USA and Canada. Class times for the online modules may include some weekday evenings as well as weekends.

Apply for an MPA Scholarship

FDU is offering the opportunity to apply for scholarships providing 10% to 50% tuition discounts for those students beginning in January and enrolling for the full MPA. The deadline for scholarship applications is 30 November 2020.

Winter 2021

Public and Non-Profit Sectors

Public and Non-profit Management

Global Health and Human Services Systems

Explore the challenges for management within the public and non-profit sectors, particularly in response to external factors. Debating across continents highlights the particular issues at stake either side of the Atlantic.

Core requirement:

Public and Non-profit management provides an overview of the macro and micro impact of fiscal and resource scarcity, rapid technological change and obsolescence, organizational downsizing/restructuring, information management technology, and shifting employee demographics. The course will focus on the methods and strategies for efficiently and effectively managing public organizations in the face of endemic internal and external challenges.

Elective:

Global Health and Human Services Systems focuses on health and social care – ‘human services’ – exploring the comparative experience of particular professions, and patient, public and individual experiences; long-term and emergency planning, including the impact of local, national and global emergencies, such as epidemics and pandemics; public health; mental health; and public and private management and financing. Case studies include the USA, UK, Canada, Germany, Mexico and India. The role of international organisations will also be discussed, together with the importance of historical examples of healthcare emergencies, and the reasons why different healthcare systems have evolved in different countries.

Spring/Summer 2021

Long-term and Emergency Planning

Crisis Management

Cities in Crisis

Explore planning and decision-making through two elective modules. The second module considers both longer term and emergency planning.

Crisis Management explores topics such as challenges for healthcare, education, security, trade, and the environment, and techniques of crisis communications and leadership, with sessions including a range of experienced guest speakers. Sessions will be flexible in order to respond to current crises.

Cities in Crisis examines problems faced by British, American, Canadian, and other cities across the world, relating to crime, security, homelessness and housing, health, social care, the environment and climate, education and school safety, and finances. It will consider comparative causes and solutions to these problems. Some of the course content will be flexible in order to respond to current crises.

Autumn 2021

International Policy Making, Politics and Trade

Public Policy Administration

Rethinking Europe's Future

International Organizations

Develop your understanding of trans-Atlantic policy making and management, and the international context, as Britain heads towards a new future outside of the European Union.

Core Requirement:

The goal of Public Policy Administration is to expose students to the economic and moral justification for public policies, teaching the analytical tools that support informed policy. The course addresses policy-making at all levels of government with an emphasis on skills that can be used by managers on a daily basis, considering the differences and similarities between British, American and Canadian practices.

Choose one elective:

Rethinking Europe's Future not only considers Britain's exit from the EU, but other perspectives, including from across the Atlantic. Since the rejection of the European Union's Constitutional Treaty by France and the Netherlands, the twin burdens of "depth" and "breadth" have reappeared in the region's political imagination and debate in the form of two fundamental questions over Europe's future: What is Europe? What Europe for which Europeans?

International Organizations examines the development and current activities of public and private supranational, international and transnational organisations, including the League of Nations and the United Nations, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees; the Red Cross Movement; Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs); and regional organisations.

Winter 2022

Theory and Practice of Organizations

Organizational Theory

Budgeting and Finance

Undertake two core modules to study theoretical and practical examples of organisations and external influences.

Core requirements:

The first module involves an analysis of the role of Organizational Theory, discussion of the major orientations in explaining organizational and administrative activities and their impact upon those who work within or are affected by organizational action. This includes: organizational theories that enable leaders to understand and influence organizational structure and culture; theories of how organizations work and why people behave as they do in the work setting; factors that impact productivity, motivation, innovation, safety, and innovation; key performance measures and strategies of successful operations; and components of organizational culture and its importance in the operations of the organization.

Budgeting and Finance presents an overview of the major principles and concepts associated with public expenditure budgeting and the resource allocation decision-making process. The first part of the course focuses on the centrality of the budget process and examines the logic and process of budgeting, fund accounting and financial statement analysis. The second part of the course focuses on revenue structures and examines basic principles of taxation and the nature and diversity of public sector revenues.

Spring/Summer 2022

Analysis, IT and Trade

Analytical Methods and Managerial Decision Making

Information Technology Management

Seminar in International Trade

A core module enables you to explore analytical skills, and a choice of electives allow you to focus on IT and analytical skills, or international trade.

Core requirement:

Analytical Methods and Managerial Decision Making provides an overview of the decision-making tools employed in program management and evaluation. The course begins with an overview of the principles of research design focusing on the basic methods of problem diagnosis and measurement (interviews, surveys, focus groups, archival analysis). The second part of the course emphasizes the principles and tools of program evaluation. The course develops the analytical and critical thinking skills of students to solve common management problems.

Choose one elective:

Information Technology Management is an overview of the various tools and technologies of information management. The fundamentals of information systems are presented including the future impact of the technology on society with emphasis on understanding emerging policy, ethical and managerial issues. Focus will be on the use of Management Information Systems in decision making and performance management. In addition, issues around GDPR (General Data Protection Regulation) are discussed, along with Big Data and the potential of using Blockchain for Public and Non-Profit Administration.

Seminar in International Trade investigates why nations and organizations trade: what they trade, how they trade, and gains and losses. We also examine regulations and restrictions on international trade and their affects. Topics include commodities markets, foreign direct investment, international transactions under authoritarian regimes, the role of banks and brokers, international trade agreements, parallel markets and current trade policy disputes.

Autumn 2022

People, Policy and Ethics

Human Resources Management

Environment and Public Administration

Ethics in Public Affairs

Examine people and policy from different perspectives, with management within the workplace, ethics in wider society, or the environment.

Core requirement:

Human Resources Management presents students with an overview of the tools and techniques of human resources management and the major personnel policy issues. The course emphasizes the application of specific knowledge, skills and abilities to solve management problems. Topics covered include recruitment, examination, job classification, salary and wage administration, performance management, employee development, supervision, equal employment opportunity and affirmative action.

Choose one elective:

Environment and Public Administration is an introduction to how public administrators handle environmental concerns and the effects of global warming on local, state, and federal levels. The class structure will include: 1) What are environmental problems and concerns and how do they differ between localities and nations; 2) Differences in local, state, federal/national and international levels of planning; 3) How environmental issues can influence local, state or regional and national and international politics; 4) How organisations such as local authorities, national governments and the third sector manage the aftermath of environmental disasters.

Ethics in Public Affairs explores the use (and abuse) of moral reasoning and cost-benefit analysis in politics. Comparative examples between the US, UK and Canada are explored, including the critical examination of controversial political issues, such as abortion, affirmative action, health care, welfare reform, military intervention, and the death penalty. It is suitable for students with a wide range of interests, including foreign policy, domestic policy, public administration, and contemporary politics.

Online-only module

Professional Communication

This module can be taken at any time alongside residential modules, making up one of your 13 modules for the MPA, or independently if you wish to gain training in this particular area.

Professional Communication has three separate components, which can also be undertaken separately as 3 single-credit courses –

- 2) Press releases and crisis management
- 3) Managing social media

MPA Thesis or Project Report

Undertake a dissertation project, on a topic devised by you, with advice from tutors on feasibility. The thesis can be undertaken with supervision online or onsite and alongside other modules. Or choose an analytical, written report detailing action-oriented research accomplished for a public agency.

The above programme is indicative and subject to change, responding to demand for particular modules. Additional modules which may run during 2021-22 include Global Transport Management, World Heritage Law and Policy, Comparative Governmental and Administrative Systems, Political Leadership and the U.N., and a number of options may be offered as online-only electives.

Modules are valued at 3 credits, with 42 credits necessary for a Master of Public Administration degree from Fairleigh Dickinson University. Any of the modules can be taken independently as short courses, with certificates awarded.
